Vintage report

The luck of the Palatine showed itself already in spring. The vegetation was able to develop at mild temperatures without frost damage. The above-average warmth ran like a thread through the following months. All stages of development in the vineyards began earlier and proceeded more rapidly than usual. In July, however, a hot spell lasting several days led to sunburn damage to the grapes. The late summer was also dry, allowing the winegrowers to harvest in peace and, in most cases, without time pressure. Burgundy was an exception: Here, speed was required so that the must weights and thus the alcohol levels did not become too high. The advantage of the drought was also in this growing region that there were no diseases. Due to the healthy condition of the grapes, they can look forward to perfect quality in the cellar.
